

As an experienced financial advisor of over 33 years, one of the things I regularly remind clients is that as a fee-only financial advisor I have a moral and legal fiduciary responsibility to provide advice and guidance that I believe is always in their best interest. At times, this may even mean some “tough love” if it requires challenging a client’s well-intentioned desires or actions.